Right side of the Guerini receiver. Both sides are identically detailed in this heavy gothic-style scrollwork.

Underside of the Guerini receiver, consistent with the side in its engraving manner, and well done over all.

Guerini left no metalwork unadorned, as evidenced by the toplever, tang, and fences on the Maxum.

We loved the checkering on the Guerini, sharp, tight, and offering excellent purchase for ungloved hands. The Maxum's forend detaches easily for any hand, thanks to the simple and efficient Anson-Deeley push rod detach.
